

Unsettled Weather Beginning Tuesday | Rain Late Week

KEY POINTS

- Above normal temperatures today before cooling to around normal starting Tuesday.
- Breezy to locally windy on Tuesday with temperatures dropping to below normal Wednesday. A few showers possible mainly over the eastern AZ higher terrain on Wednesday.
- A more organized weather system with decent moisture is expected for late Thursday through at least Friday night. We are likely to see some minor wind impacts, a few thunderstorms Friday, and fairly widespread light to moderate precipitation.
- While a few showers may linger into Saturday for higher terrain areas of south-central Arizona, drying and warming conditions anticipated going through this weekend.

Rain Chances Increasing Middle - Late This Week

February 10, 2025
2:55 AM

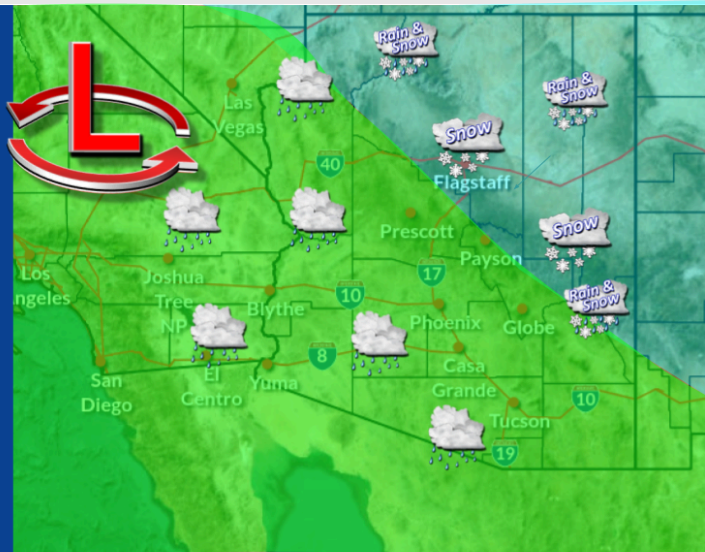

A storm system impacting the West Coast during the middle to latter portions of this week may result in favorable desert rain and mountain snow across the Southwest United States.

What We Can Expect:

- ❑ Light rain chances as early as Wednesday
- ❑ Potential for multiple rounds, with the best lower desert chances projected for the daytime hours Friday
- ❑ Cool temperatures & breezy conditions

What Is Less Certain:

- ❑ Exact timing of rainfall
- ❑ Rainfall totals
- ❑ Thunderstorm potential (Friday)
