Council Approves Emergency Plan

After nearly 3 years of discussions, meetings and meticulous reviews, the Quechan Tribal Council voted to approve the Quechan Indian Tribe Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan on December 6, 2013. The plan will enable the Tribe to receive federal and state assistance in the event of any large scale disaster or terrorist event, since it incorporates the mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery components of the national emergency plan.

The introduction to the Plan states that its purpose is "to promote the whole community approach to enhancing our collective capacity to prevent, respond to and recover from critical hazards and incidents." Such hazards and incidents could include flooding, earthquakes, large scale wildfires or a train derailment which could cause a serious fire or involve leaks of toxic chemicals.

Developed primarily by Rosario Zavala, the Emergency Administrative Assistant assigned to the Quechan Tribal Police Department, the 112 page plan includes procedures for almost any kind of incident that can be imagined. From lock down and evacuation plans for the San Pasqual Schools to bomb threats, active shooter scenarios and emergency response plans for the Quechan Casino Resort and local utilities, there are specific duties and responsibilities laid out for all cooperating and assisting agencies or organizations that might be involved.

Those procedures follow those outlined by the National Incident Management System (NIMS). NIMS is a multi-agency emergency incident planning system which defines clear lines of authority and who reports to whom. It defines the span of control to a limited number of leaders (depending on the incident), identifying locally available physical and financial resources to help prevent confusion when seconds count.

This gives the Onsite Incident Commander full authority to take command and resolve the situation through a predetermined chain-of-command which may involve both Tribal entities and other local emergency responders such as the Imperial County Sheriff's Office, the Union Pacific Rail Road Police and the Winterhaven Fire Protection District, among others.

With all surrounding city, county and state jurisdictions also utilizing Emergency Action Plans which meet NIMS standards, quick acceptance of the lines of authority will insure coordination of efforts, to cut response times and enable easier communication of what may be needed to meet any foreseeable emergency.

The new plan has been designed to be reviewed and updated within five years, to keep it both flexible and current. The Quechan Tribal Council plans a meeting for Tribal members in early 2014 to explain the new plan and how it will effect emergency operations.

Annual Winter Baseball Camp Returns to San Pasqual

John Stratton, former coach of the Arizona Western College Matadors baseball team provides infield instruction to a group of local athletes at the San Pasqual high school athletic complex on December 21st. AWC pitcher Matt Higgins can be seen helping out by performing the moves Coach Stratton describes, so everyone can see the exact position to take to be ready for grounders, pop flies and catching another player off base. San Pasqual Baseball Coach (and Quechan Tribal member) Faron Owl brings in college and pro-level athletes and coaches every year at this time, to give local kids a chance to receive a full day of winter break instruction from the best the Yuma area has to offer. Others on hand this year were 22 year AWC pitching coach Alan Manifold, former Matador (and now Gila Ridge Head Coach) James Kuzniak, as well as AWC shortstop Albert Frajo. Many top rated local players also stopped in to help out with coaching.

A Merry Christmas Breakfast From The Tribal Council

Tribal employees were invited to a free, hot breakfast in the Tribal Council Chambers on the day before of Christmas Eve, at the invitation of the full Tribal Council.

The kitchen staff at the Quechan Casino Resort cooked up ham and eggs, breakfast potatoes, and hot rolls and croissants with plenty of butter and jam.

The Tribal Council themselves provided hot coffee and a selection of fruit danish, all served up on inviting rows of tables covered in freshly pressed table linens!

QUECHAN POST 802

Distributes Gift Baskets To The Tribal Community

Tribal members were invited to stop by the Quechan American Legion Post 802 the Saturday before Christmas to receive a portion of the Paradise Casino's annual charity commitment. The Post was a busy place from 9 to noon that morning as families streamed in to pick up well packed food boxes averaging about 18 pounds. Those who brought their kids also received free age appropriate toys for everyone up to the age of 12, donated by both the Casino and the members of Post 802. Over 250 food boxes and 300 plus toys were given away in a little over 3 hours.

Gordon Osborne and Milson José (above) packed boxes full of tuna, sardines, soups, cereal, sugar, and cake and dinner mixes. At least 10 members of Quechan Post 802 and their Ladies Auxiliary stood by to pass out the goodies. At right, Deborah Tourtillot asks the ages of Lemuel Porter's sons, Tylor, Luke, Elijah, Christopher and Job, before she selects their gifts.

Progress Being Made On Kwat'san Language Dictionary

For many years now, the Quechan language Preservation Department, various elders, and a small group of academics from outside of the Tribe have combined their efforts to create a Classroom Dictionary of the Kwat'san Language, to assist in passing the language along to future generations while preserving the contextual pronunciations and idiomatic meanings of as many words as possible. A major block to their success was the fact that getting a volume published takes not only time, but money.

Now finally, eight months after receiving the Quechan Tribe's grant request for such a project, the federal Institute of Museum and Library Services provided a year of funding for a Quechan Classroom Dictionary on August 27th of 2013.

Since that time, an entire organization of Kwat'san language speakers has come together to fulfill the conditions of the grant and move quickly on the project. After only a few months of progress, the Tribe is looking for a contractor to provide graphic design services to create illustrations for the dictionary and assist in its layout. (The full RFP requesting those services is printed on page 10 of this issue. If you are an interested Tribal member, check it out and submit your bid to the Tribe before the January 10th deadline!)

In the meantime, Linguist Amy Miller, Ph.D. has been hired to assist Barbara Levy of the Quechan Language Preservation Program in the publication of the two volumes of oral stories. A monthly series of 3-day meetings has been arranged with Tribal elders who are fluent Kwat'san speakers, to list and compare vocabularies, "mapping out" the words and pronunciations used, to insuring the accuracy of each elder's words as they are spoken.

Those elders include George Bryant, Muriel Bryant, Linda Rivera and Perdius and Tessie Escalante. After collating the vocabularies listed at each monthly meeting, Dr. Miller returns home to analyze what has been gathered and produces the typescript for the Quechan Classroom Dictionary.

The collected vocabularies will form the foundation of the new dictionary, for classroom use by both the Quechan Language Program and the Tribe's Johnson O'Malley Program.

"We will work diligently for at least for nine more months until the project is completed," says Barbara Levy, the Quechan Language Coordinator. "The Museum Library grant is giving our tribe the opportunity to share this knowledge left behind by those who have participated in the work project."

Members of the Quechan Language Preservation Program sit at the head table with linguist Amy Miller during the December Quechan Language Dictionary meetings. Tribal elders and other native Kwat'san speakers are seated around them at adjoining tables, providing their input. QUECHAN NEWS Photos by William Isbell

The new dictionary should greatly assist the process of increasing the basic vocabulary of children, young adults, and their family members.

"It is so exciting that we have reached this point," says Tribal Council member Julianna Comet. "We have a great opportunity here with our elders coming together and speaking our language so that Quechans can read to young children."

An additional project to promote classroom teaching of the Kwat'san language involves the Tribe's purchase of two books of Quechan stories in a bilingual format.

The first book is a volume entitled Stories from Quechan Oral Literature from the Collection of A.M. Halpern.

This 304-page book contains eleven traditional stories which were narrated by tribal elders and recorded on tape in the 1970s by the well-known linguist "Abe" Halpern. (Dr. Miller comes to the current Quechan Classroom Dictionary project after having assisted in getting Dr. Halpern's books published.)

The second book to be acquired is Xiipuktan (First of All): Three Accounts of the Origins of the Quechan People Told or Retold in the Quechan Language by George Bryant. This 199-page volume demonstrates the rich and diverse variety of Quechan Creation stories still circulating within the tribe.

The plan is to acquire fifty paperback and five hardback copies of each book for the Tribe to use in classroom lessons. Electronic archive copies of each book will also be acquired for future use when the books themselves are too old and worn out to be used any longer.

EDA Hires New Planner With A Record Number of Names

The Quechan Economic Development Administration (EDA) recently hired Orson Bevins in the position of Planner, to assist with land use planning and administration around the reservation. He says his goal in the position is to facilitate projects that will leverage the Tribe's intrinsic resources for economic development. He has previously worked in planning and mapping positions for several local government agencies, all in the San Diego area.

Mr. Bevins is from Yakima, Washington, where he graduated from high school before enrolling in community college courses, slowly building up enough units for graduation.

Orson received his Associate of Arts from Grossmont College in El Cajon in 2005. Soon after, his position at a health insurance company was "offshored". Though his boss encouraged him to apply for a similar position within the company, he politely declined to enroll at San Diego State University instead. There, in 2008, he received his Bachelor of Arts in Geography.

During that time, Orson gained an education on land use planning, analysis, statistics and mapping technology.

At that time his pregnant wife was basically the sole breadwinner. Orson says he went through a difficult time while attending SDSU, working only a part time weekend job. Plus, their son Erik was born on the same day he had two finals!

Fortunately, the County of San Diego hired him as an Intern to prepare maps for the Planning Commission and the Board of Supervisors, where he learned even more about planning and development.

While his father gave him an incredible 72 names at birth, you can just call him Orson Bevins when you run into him at work!

"While the journey to graduate was challenging," said Orson, "I succeeded through help from many of my family, friends, mentors and just good providence."

After graduation, he went to work for the City of Encinitas and a rural Resource Conservation District (the RCD). At the City, he assisted the public at the planning desk window, digitizing engineering drawings into the city mapping system. While at the RCD, Orson continued his mapping while engaging the public one-on-one.

His wife, Claudia, was born in Blythe but grew up in Yuma, graduating from both AWC and NAU/Yuma. Orson's been coming here on and off for nearly 15 years, meeting Claudia at a wedding on his first visit. (They later married in the very same church where they met!)

Afterwards, they moved to Seattle for a year and then to San Diego. When their daughter Aubry-Kate was born, they decided to return to Yuma.

Despite the nice weather and beaches, Orson says, "San Diego is a difficult place to buy a house, even on two incomes. Unfortunately, we were in the middle of the bubble when we really wanted to buy a house. Prices were sky high and even when they crashed, prices were still out of our range."

That's when they decided to move to Yuma. "I love it here and have never regretted the decision," he says. "It's a great place to raise a family." Orson also likes that he no longer has to commute for 3 hours to a job in San Diego!

When he's not at work, Orson likes to play with his children, go hiking and attempt to learn golf. He also shared the story of his 72 names, "I have a birth certificate that is two sheets long. I carry a copy of it around because people don't believe me. My dad was trying to get me into the Guinness Book of World Records, he just never followed through." Here is his full legal name:

Tribal Member Honored for 30 Years as Firefighter

Every year, sometime around Christmas, the men and women of the Winterhaven Fire Protection District (WFPD) get together to review the past 12 months, recognize the achievements of their best, and announce the names of those moving up the ladder of promotion.

In 2013, the Department held the annual gathering on December 6th at the Pivot Point Conference Center. Guests included Frank Salazar, an aide from the office of California State Senator Ben Hueso, representing the state's 40th District. The district covers all of Imperial County, the southern portion of Riverside, and the desert areas of San Diego County along the border.

Retired California State Fire Marshal Ronny J. Coleman, a columnist for Fire Chief magazine, was also there, to serve as guest speaker and pass on some of the wisdom and knowledge he's gained from nearly a half century in the fire service.

The room was also filled with family and friends of the local fire fighters, who all came to enjoy a great dinner, good music, and the opportunity to thank those who put their lives on the line to keep us all safe every day.

Tribal member Ramon Barton was among those being honored that night, receiving a Fire Service retirement pocket watch, a 30 Year Service Medal, and certificates recognizing his years with the Department from both Chief Steve Taylor and State Senator Hueso.

Mr. Barton grew up in the Los Angeles area, where he graduated from high school and began his adult life as a Driver and Emergency Medical Technician for an L.A. ambulance service. After about six years, Ramon returned to the reservation around 1980. He worked as a bus driver at Quechan Head Start, then moved over to the San Pasqual Schools, where he eventually retired after 22 years.

"I had held various jobs with the Tribe," he remembers, "and I always wanted to help people. I'd been in the medical field for a long time, so I turned to the (Winterhaven) fire department and got a job there as a fireman in 1980. And it was all strictly volunteer in those days." At that time, even the Chief was strictly a volunteer.

"I believe it was a gentleman named Paul Myers, who was also the Pastor for the Nazarene Church," Barton recalls.

There were 12 to 15 volunteers when he began, and they all got together, usually on Saturdays, to inspect and clean their equipment, and perform maintenance on their truck and the Imperial County equipment, also kept at the station house. "We were the only firemen here," Mr. Barton says, "So we were here to man their truck and tender, whenever there was a fire out in the county."

Over the years he spent time with the Winterhaven Fire District, Ramon rose in the ranks as he gained experience and continued his education. He continually studied all the materials available, and took the tests required for ever more responsible positions.

Thinking back on it, he said, "I became a Captain for the longest time . . . that had to be somewhere around '84." Later on, Mr. Barton even attained the rank of Fire Chief.

Throughout his career, what he remembers most is the satisfaction of helping people in need. After so long a time, some of the calls seem to blend together. But he remembers one particular summer very well.

"There was a big wildfire out near the IID buildings, where their employees lived around Laguna Dam. We had all sorts of other agencies come in: City of Yuma, YPG, Rural Metro, a BLM crew, even some Hot Shots came in from New Mexico with helicopters and everything out there." He said the entire operation lasted about a week, and while his crew was mostly along the river's edge below the dam, they ended up everywhere. Despite the size of the fire, he proudly recalls "We managed to save all the buildings, didn't lose a one of 'em."

No longer strictly a volunteer fire department, he says the Winterhaven Fire Protection District became a paid force around the time the casinos were built, when they took on the added responsibility of insuring the safety of the casinos' guests and staff under a contract with the Quechan Tribe.

Ramon Barton retired in 2010, with a full 30 years on the job. He says he doesn't recall many Native Americans remaining with a single fire company for so long, and he's proud to have accomplished so much.

"You just have to have the dedication and commitment to stick with it," he said. "It takes a lot of your time."

Blanket Drive Helps Teach About Christmas Giving

Marlon Barley holds up a donated blanket before it goes into the growing pile. Photo: Cynthia Porchas-Navarro Third grade students in Cynthia Porchas-Navarro's third grade class at the San Pasqual Elementary School were taught a valuable Christmas lesson over the past month, as they all pitched in to gather blankets for the Quechan Tribe's Home Bound Elders.

The annual donation project developed after students requested a Christmas gift exchange five years ago. Mrs. Porchas-Navarro explains: "Although I know a lot of our students are in situations of need themselves, I felt it was important to teach them the value of giving to others and the satisfaction that can bring."

"With the help of some parents, I contacted Noreen Hill from the Home Bound Elders group, and they became the recipients of our students' generosity." Though they collected only a few blankets (mainly from students) that first year, the following year school staff was included as well.

"Last year, I made it a district wide effort," the teacher explains. I thought, if students see adults and staff also caring about their community and giving back, then it will help motivate them to do the same."

It's worked out so well, last year she expanded the effort district wide.

With Noreen Hill providing contact with about three dozen home bound elders, the school set a goal of gathering up at least 30 blankets.

"Last year we were able to deliver that, with blankets literally coming in until the last second," Mrs. Porchas-Navarro told the Quechan News a week before the district closed down for their two week winter break. "This year, I already have 24 blankets, and I still have a week left until I deliver!" At that time, she expressed hope that they would reach their goal or maybe even exceed it.

By the time classes were released on December 20th, the third grade class had collected 26 brand-new blankets to help keep our Home Bound Tribal Elders warm for the winter . . . very close to their goal.

Students carried the collection out to their teacher's car and packed them all inside. At the end of the day, after seeing her students off at the bus lanes, Mrs. Porchas-Navarro and Nicole Terry, a fourth grade teacher who also assisted with the project this year, drove about a mile west to drop them off with the Montague family on Arnold Road. The blankets were then distributed to elders in need over the following weekend.

Mrs. Porchas-Navarro's third grade students loaded her SUV with the blankets for delivery to the Home Bound Elders. That's Jerry McGuire, Tommy Sands and Tanzen Nuñez loading the last few, above.

The blankets were then dropped off at the home of Thomas and Dorothea Montague for distribution to the elders.

Top Goes Onto New Water Tower

QUECHAN NEWS Photos by William Isbell

A giant extendable, counterweighted crane was brought in by BLT on Friday, December 13, to lift the final section onto the new 780,000 gallon water tower on Indian Hill. The iron workers from Southwest Tank and Steel had already test fit the hand rails for the "roof" of the tank earlier in the week, setting it aside to clear the way for the top to go up first.

Six high strength steel cables were attached to special fittings welded to the roof section, and the crane operator slowly lifted the huge 30 foot wide assembly into position above the tank. Steel workers stood out of sight on the north side of the walkway encircling tank, helping to guide it into place with hand signals. Once it was perfectly centered above the tank, it slowly settled into place inches above the huge, round tower.

Sal Haro and Conrad Outland prepare to muscle the roof into alignment before welding it into place.

World Class Entertainment Continues At “The Q”!

Paul Rodriguez was the recent headliner in a night of comedy that also featured Mad TV's Bobby Lee and the duo of Williams and Ree.

The Quechan Casino♠Resort continues to host top line entertainment, most recently hosting a three act comedy concert with Paul Rodriguez as the star attraction. The December 13 show also featured Williams & Ree (a country comedy duo known far and wide as “The Indian and The White Guy”) and MADtv veteran Bobby Lee.

Williams & Ree kicked off the show with their own twisted version of the Don Rickles school of comedy, spiced with a helping of real musical talent. They began by saying they “may comment on people of different ethnic backgrounds, and that no one should be offended, since we are all the same here in this great country . . . which the white people stole from us Indians!” That comment began a 25 minute tirade of jabs, barbs and hilarious insults back and forth between the veteran pair of comedians, who both poked fun at and reinforced stereotypes with the goal of provoking laughter. It was a great start to a very funny night, which had the crowd in the Pipa Event Center howling for almost two solid hours.

As soon as they finished, Bobby Lee ran out on stage, only to find his microphone had switched off! A stagehand appeared to rectify the situation, and the physical comedian ran back off stage, to re-enter to even bigger cheers as he started over! Bobby recapitulated some of his best routines about “all Asians looking alike,” saying he’s constantly mistaken for other actors on the street, “even that chick on Greys Anatomy!”

When Paul Rodriguez appeared, the crowd jumped to their feet to welcome the veteran funnyman, who kept everyone rolling with his observations on family dynamics, getting older, and why we all love our mothers. He even had a bit about the Cuban accent, saying “those guys always sound like they’re talking underwater!” as he garbled a string of incomprehensible Spanish and English phrases while speaking in a very serious manner.

Paul’s act ended with a funny (but nice) tribute to his mother, who died last year at 96. He said it felt like coming home to entertain the Yuma audience, and says he hopes to come back.

The entertainment just keeps on coming, as the Elvis Expo returns to the Q in a little over two weeks. The three day showcase of Elvis memorabilia, talent contests and live tribute recreations of the King of Rock & Roll’s career will fill the Pipa every afternoon and evening from January 16th to the 18th.

Dozens of Elvis tribute artists come from all over the world to perform over three nights and compete for a $2000 cash prize for the best recreation of the excitement generated by a live appearance by the King! Special surprise guests often attend these shows, including co-stars from many of his films, so if you like Elvis, you don’t want to miss this show!

A contemporary of Elvis will follow up at the end of February, as Canadian born singer, songwriter and composer Paul Anka comes to the Q to perform over five decades worth of hits!

Anka recorded his first single, “I Confess”, when he was 14. His hit “Diana” brought Anka stardom as one of the best selling singles ever by a Canadian recording artist, rocketing to #1 on the charts in 1957. He followed up with four songs in the Top 20 in 1958, including “It’s Time to Cry”, which hit #4 and “(All Of a Sudden) My Heart Sings”, which reached #15, making him

Paul Anka continued actively recording until the late 1970’s, playing regularly in Las Vegas. His comeback began with the 1998 album “A Body of Work.” Anka also shares credit for co-writing the Michael Jackson hit “This Is It.” Tickets for all shows are available at the Quechan Casino♠Resort box office and on-line at startickets.com.

The Quechan Indian Tribe (Tribe), through the Tribal Council and the Language Preservation Program, seeks proposals from qualified firms or individuals to provide Graphic Design services for an illustrated Classroom Dictionary in Winterhaven, California.

Description of Need:

We are proposing to produce an illustrated classroom dictionary for use by elementary grade students using the basic vocabulary spoken by the language instructors. The dictionary project will involve two consultants; a linguist and a graphic designer, to produce the classroom dictionary. The project will require the Language Program instructors and Director to allocate a portion of their time towards meeting with the linguist consultant three times for a total of nine days within the twelve-month timeframe of the Project. The Program staff will share existing printed and digital copies of curriculum materials with the linguist and graphic designer during the course of the Project. The project budget has estimated 100 hours be utilized by the Graphic Designer for work involved in illustrating the dictionary with scalable line drawings and pictures. The Graphic Designer will work in a collaborative process with the project team to ensure everyone's satisfaction with the final product. The linguist will be responsible for producing the typescript of a Classroom Dictionary of basic vocabulary as spoken by the language teachers. Several dictionary illustrations may be incorporated into display cases at the Quechan Cultural Center located temporarily at the Quechan Resort Casino. The project budget anticipates printing about 1,000 copies of the completed dictionary.

Purpose of Proposal:

- Ability to communicate materials over the internet with the Linguist and Program Director.

Submittal Criteria:

"We would like the fair to be as interactive as possible," says District Therapist Rigel Garibay. "We are also looking for agencies interested in donating an item for the raffle. It would be greatly appreciated."

Quechan Parks and Rec Announces THE BEST Lights Christmas OF 2013!

Eileen Valenzuela took first place this year, for not only lighting up the entire corner of Amethyst Lane and Coral Drive, but for including the family's kids on the front lawn as a living nativity scene!

Second place went to Anna Hemmer, for her home in Yuma, with its impressive collection of toy soldiers, snow globes, Disney characters and lighted Christmas presents laid out on a well lit front lawn.

And the snowman themed home of Rosalinda Perez took third place for the 2013 Christmas Lighting Contest. Additional characters on the roof, multicolored "icicles" along the eaves, candy canes lining the driveway and a waving "Tigger" on the front lawn all helped to pull it together!
